The greatness of our Annexation Sale shines out by comparison.

What others consider "Stupendous" is but ordinary to Goldenberg's. We have our own standard of values-broke away from the old standard long ago. When others ask you to consider their "stupendous sacrifices" use our values for comparison. Buying and selling as Goldenberg's do, cost prices and selling prices must necessarily be lower. Large quantity buying for cash commands very low prices, so that when there are reductions to be made, such as is being made in all departments just now during this Annexation Sale, there is wide chance to do it.

The greatest of the other sales which you read of this morning, and their value offerings, are insignificant when compared to the values we name. In no instance have we overstated the facts-exaggerated the values. No matter how much exaggeration others print, the temporary gain which may possibly come of it shall never

The greatest week of this Annexation Sale begins tomorrow. Such values as we tell of hereafter need but little argument.

DOWN CRASHED THE SHED

Narrow Escape From Death of Pedestrians.

ONE MAN SERIOUSLY INJURED

Boston Variety Store Entrance Falls-Many People Underneath It at the Time-A Panic Among the Cierks-Fire Alarm Turned In.

Two persons were injured, while a score of others had narrow escapes from death or injury beneath the heavy timbers of the temporary shed erected across the side walk in front of the Boston Variety Store when it fell with a crash a few minutes after 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, as told in The Evening Times.

The fallen shed covered the pavement like a roof, from the front wall of the old building, No. 705 Market Space, which is being tern down, to the curbstone. It was placed there to prevent pedestrians from being struck by falling debris during the demolition of the structure, which is to be replaced by a handsome modern edifice.

Market Space at that hour in the after noon, especially on Saturdays, is crowded with shoppers and others, and yesterlay was no exception to the rule. Eye witnesses estimate that there were at least twenty men, women and children directly inder the shed when it crashed to the street below. It was constructed of heavy joists and timbers, besides being ladea with a mass of flooring girders and other material, which were being taken by the workmen from the torn down building. The only warning those beneath had that the shed was coming down was a sharp crack, like the report of a musket, followed by a crunching sound, as the timbers were toru from their fastenings. The next instant the mass of lumber fell with a crash which could be heard several blocks, while clouds of dust arose from the wreck ed structure.

"Look out!" shouted an old man, who stood near the wall of the partly razed structure. "Look out, the building is tumbling fown!"

The warning cry was heard by the people under the shed and many of them scampered to places of safety. One old lady was petrified with fear and stood like a statue, her face as pale as morble She had tightly clasped her hands to gether and collapsed just as a brawny workman sensed her and carried her inte a nearby store, where she fainted. A mid-die-aged white manalso suffered a paralysis of fright when the crash came, and had to be led from the debris, which fell within two feet of him.

The dust which arose from the wreck resembled smoke, and caused a nervous young man to shout "Fire!" The cry was taken up, and someone pulled in a fire alarm from the keyless box at the comer of Seventh street and Louisiana avenue In the meantime, a great crowd had as sembled about the place, and it was the ple were buried beneath the pile of fallen

"There are bodies under there!" went up the cry, and willing hands commenced o clear away the mass of spintered beams and timbers. At this juncture clanging gongs told of the arrival of the fire engines and police reserves from the First and Sixth precincts. The great crowd which had as sembled from all points as if by magic, was forced back, and the police and fire men got to work and extricated James Hamilton of No. 813 G street northwest, from beneath the pile. He was carried mto Saks & Co.'s store and laid out upor the floor in a semi-conscious condition until the arrival of the ambulance, which conveyed him to the Emergency Hospital. Mrs. Hand, who resides at No. 921 F street northeast, was also found in a fainting condition. She had been struck on the lees by a falling timber and nainfully in ured. After treatment in Saks & Co.'s store, she was sent to her home. When the crash came Hamilton was standing at the curbstone, and was caught fairly under the mass of lumber. He was severely injured, and ower his escape from stant death to the fact that the descend ing timbers tumbled him into the gutter and several joists formed a protecting tent-like barrier above him. His right leg was broken between the ankle and knee and he received in addition a gash over his right temple and bruises about the body. Last night be was reported to be resting easily at the hospital. Mr. Hamilton is an unemployed workman and had been standing about the building several hours, seeking employment on the structure, which was being demolished He has a family to support, and the accident vesterday will confine him to his bed for some time and leave them in a bad

Fortunately, there were no vehicles standing in front of the shed when it collapsed or there would have been other casualties added to the fist. When the timbers broke joose from the walls of the building, the shed did not fall directly upon the side walk, but slid toward the roadway, the heavy timbers covering about one-half of the payement and a third of the carriage The accident was caused by the workmen piling a great mass of joists and preparatory to lowering it to the street This material was torn from the second story of the building being razed, and as it was piled on the outer edge of the shed that structure was overbalanced and came down like a dead fall or death trap. As the clouds of dust following the crash were blown into the Boston Variety Store, adjoining the partly torn down edifice, there was a panic among the derks, who believed the entire building was tundding down upon them. Several of the girls collapsed when they heard the shouts outside and saw the rapidly gathering crowd, After the firemen had removed the niles lumber and found that there were no dead and mangled bodies under the mass dage about the building

Policeman Heller, who is statloned at the intersection of Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street, heard the crash and ran to the scene of the accident. He then went to the patrol box and summoned the First precinct teserves and Emergency ambulance. The police report several hair breadth escapes. A hady holding two small children by the hand came within a few inches of being struck down by a heavy joist. She screamed at the top of her voice and was lustled, with her little charges, to a place of safety. An old gentleman had his beaver hat knocked off by the descend ing timbers, and it was trampled out of shape by the rush of pedestrians who were under the shed when it fell.

Commissioner Wight and Mr. Emmons Smith, proprietor of the Poston Variety Store, were on hand a few moments afte the accident Mr. Wight made a personal inspection of the conditions under which the accident occurred, and will order an investigation tomorrow. The shed was erected by the workman employed by Mr. Frank H. Duchay, the contractor who is demolishing the old building and preparing to erect a new one in the contractor who is demolished the old building and preparing to erect a new one in the contractor who is demolished the old building and preparing to erect a new one in the contractor who is demolished th

CLAIMS OF WARRING FACTIONS

Uncertainty as to Who Will Be the Recognized Authority in the Lone Star State Keeping Applicants in Suspense-Billy Oldham's Sad Fate Recalled.

The pitiful plight of Texas Republicans ontinues to harrow the feelings of kindearted people here. The average crossroads postoffice appointments now run over a hundred daily. Texas gets none of inese. This is not because the Texas volunteers cannot be induced to serve Every Texan who expressed his willing ness to "accept" an office stands boldly in readiness. But the command to "fail in" on the pie counter is not given. Mr. McKinley and his Cabinet when they take up a Texas "case" drop it again as if it The reason for this is pretty well known by this time. There are two opposing factions of Republicans, and either of them would rather see the offices filled forever by Democrats than to have the other faction When an appointment does happen to get brough, from any reason, both factions claim it. This has gone on with little interruption since March 5, and bids fair to continue, although the factions fondly believe that "tomorrow" their side will get a perfect flood of patronage. There are about 100 resignations of Texas small postmasters unacted upon, and a great many removals ready to be made, if the two factions can get together. There has een but one fourth-class Texas postmaster appointed in the last month. As there are some 2,000 offices of that grade in Texas, the applicants are making labored alculations to find out at just what date he Texas postoffices will all be held Ly

Billy had all sorts of indorsements but lacked the particular one needed, that of his Congressman. He used to have his pockets full of large visiting cards, one side bearing the name, "William Oldham, Denison. Texas." and on the reverse, "Texas gave Grover Cleveland 250,000 majority, and it was not a good day; if the weather had been good, what would Texas have done for Cleveland?"

Although Billy managed to circulate these in abundance, and even got a half bushel of them scattered about the White House in the course of his long sojourn in Washington, still the Denison matter hung fire. When at last the nomination was made a man with no recommendations, save a one-line request from the Congressman, slipped in ahead of Billy, with his 250,000 for Cleveland.
